832 repair to the cornfields and are soon followed by the young men, 834 who enjoy their company and take every liberty. The young men then return, and, if no hunting party offers, pass the day on 461 the tops of the huts, sleeping in the sun, or strolling from hut to 526 hut, eating corn and smoking Missourie tobacco. At other times they amuse themselves by running races either on foot or horseback, and performing warlike manoeuvres; they have also a favorite game which occupies much of their time.

512 [328]...this is the first work performed by the women in the 515 morning after having paid their devoirs to their lovers and washed themselves in the Missourie. ...every family being provided 415 with a brass or copper kettle for the purpose of cooking flesh.
177 Whether this proceeds from superstition or not I cannot pretend to 771 say, but they assured me that any kind of flesh cooked in those 574 earthen pots would cause them to split. One or more of the largest kind is constantly boiling prepared corn and beans, and all who come in are welcome to help themselves to as much as they can eat of the contents.

231 .....Early this morning our young hostler took our horses to feed 437 in the meadow but never allowed them to be for a moment out of 648 his sight, lest the Assiniboines or other enemies might steal them.
We purchased sweet corn, beans, meal, and various other trifles, for which we paid in ammunition, beads, and tobacco.

439 [329] It would have been in vain for us to attempt to prevail upon anyone in this village to ferry us over; for, as long as a stranger has any property, they wish him to trade all he brings in the first village he enters, every village being ambitious of getting as many 439 European articles as they can, [330] particularly arms and ammuni-609 tion. This is good policy; for, notwithstanding they are so near each other, and live in amity, they are not free from jealousy, and have 578 often had serious misunderstandings, sometimes ending in the death 569 of an individual, and nearly occasioning civil war. They have also to guard against their natural enemies, the Sioux, who are at no great distance. The Pawnees, also, with whom the Mandanes formerly lived in the same villages, are now their most inveterate enemies.
Arms and ammunition are, therefore, necessary articles, and everyone has a stock of ball and powder laid up in case of emergency.

675 We packed up our purchases, and gave them into the care of the ● 673 landlord. These people are much given to thieving, but in the hut [577] in which a stranger is lodged, his property may be left in perfect security; none dare touch it, as the master conceives his honor concerned in whatever is placed under his immediate protection.
Out of doors, if they can pick your pocket, or pilfer any article,

675 it is gone in an instant, and search would be in vain; everyone 673 would wish to appear innocent, although they are not offended when accused of stealing, but laugh the matter away. .....We paid 437 our landlord for board and lodging, as well as the care of our horses, 177 and of the articles left under his charge, as we never expect the least favor from any of these fellows without recompensing them accordingly. He appeared very well pleased with the following articles, which we gave him: 60 rounds of ammunition, 4 large knives, 2 awls, 1 fathom of tobacco, 1 steel, 5 flints, 1 dozen hawk-bills, 2 worms (wormers for guns), and 1 dozen brass rings....

609 [332] My host was so obliging as to give up to me one of his 574 own best beds, well surrounded with dressed leather. We had a plentiful supply of corn and beans, and were soon invited to several huts, where we [333] were treated with a very palatable dish of [H31] pounded peas and parched corn; but it is customary for invited guests, on leaving, to present the master of the hut with a few inches of tobacco, for which he always appears very thankful.

728 [335] About 30 Big Bellies soon arrived on horseback, at full speed; they brought an interpreter with them. This party consisted of some of the principal war chiefs, and other great men, who did not appear well pleased, but looked on the Pawnees with disdain.

285 [339] ...seated on a mat made of small willows of equal size, fastened together [340] by threads of their own manufacture, passed through each stick about a foot apart.

342 [340] Seldom more than one family occupies the same hut.

437 [342] We paid the young men for taking our horses across the 177 river, and the women for assisting us with the canoes. The total cost was: 1 fathom of tobacco, 4 knives, 6 flints, 6 awls, 6 worms [gun wormers—analyst], and 10 balls. I also paid my landlord for the time we might remain here, which I supposed would be about ten days for three persons, including board and lodging, stabling for our horses, and care of our property. They make no price, leaving that to the generosity of guests, and should the payment be too little they still appear to accept with gratitude; but the visitor is afterward left to take care of his own property and horses in the best manner he can. It is impossible to get the most trifling service from the natives without immediate payment; not even an inch of cord will they part with without receiving something in return. It is true a trifle will please them, and they are
